Quarterly Commentary as at March 31, 2018

Global government bonds posted modest returns in Q1, benefiting from investors seeking safety in government bonds. In the first half of the quarter, global government bond yields surged, driven by the ongoing synchronized global economic growth; however, yields reversed course in mid-February amid intensified trade disputes between the U.S. and China. Global yield curves continued to flatten into quarter end with short-dated bond yields rising more than their long-maturity peers. As a result, the benchmark's positive performance was mostly in long-maturity bonds. U.S. Treasuries underperformed other developed markets in Q1 as the U.S. Federal Reserve (Fed) continued to raise short-term interest rates and scale back reinvesting matured Treasuries and mortgage-backed securities.

The European Central Bank (ECB) kept its policy rate and asset-purchasing program unchanged and pledged easing bias until its inflation target of 2% is reached, which contributed to European bond markets outperforming their peers. Italian, Spanish and French government bonds performed best. An above-benchmark allocation to Italian and Portuguese bonds contributed to outperformance. Part of the gains from country selection was offset by the Fund's exposure to riskier corporate and emerging-market debt that performed poorly in a risk-off environment.

The portfolio manager expects global bond yields to rise slowly in the coming quarters with short-term yields continuing to rise faster than those on longer-term bonds. The Fed is expected to continue tightening its monetary policy while the ECB and Bank of Japan should roll back their easing, given the upbeat growth outlook, which is likely to push bond yields higher. However, uncertainty about trade wars will add volatility to the riskier asset markets, which will restrain yields in the near term.
