Quarterly Commentary as at June 30, 2017

All active decisions contributed to outperformance.

Global government bond yields settled down after investors grew skeptical that the Trump administration would be able to get Congress to enact his pro-growth policies. U.S. 10-year Treasury yields almost finished the quarter at the same levels they started. Bond investors stayed calm after the U.S. Federal Reserve (Fed) delivered the hike in policy rates, raising the lower bound to 1.0%.

The election of French President Emmanuel Macron boosted bonds of countries other than Germany. The win eased concern that Europe would support leaders promoting anti-trade and anti-immigration policies. European economic momentum strengthened, prompting speculation that the European Central Bank (ECB) would step away from bond buying program earlier than expected. Yields on longer-maturity bonds edged higher, underperforming shorter-maturity securities.

The Fund's underweight position in longer-term bonds, higher exposures to Mexican and Polish bonds contributed to performance, as did exposure to non-government debt. The Fund benefited from higher income provided by higher-risk corporate, emerging-market debt, capital appreciation and exposure to foreign currencies.

Expectations are global bond yields will rise slowly in coming quarters. The global economic expansion and fading threat of disinflation have led major central banks to consider tighter monetary policies, epitomized by the Fed's decision to begin reducing the amount of bonds on its balance sheet. Pro-growth policies remain in place at the ECB and the Bank of Japan, this helped keep bond yields from moving too high. Any surge in bond yields would provide opportunities to accumulate bonds at more attractive rates. Continued strength in non-government bonds may lead to further reductions in this area and a further overall reduction in portfolio risk over the second half of the year.
