Quarterly Commentary as at December 31, 2017

From an asset allocation perspective, Utilities was the biggest contributor to relative returns over the quarter. Healthcare was the biggest detractor, however strong stock selection within the sector was positive for performance. Our holdings in the Consumer Staples and Materials sectors were the biggest detractors from performance from a stock selection perspective. Our off-benchmark holding in Chinese internet giant Tencent was again the biggest contributor to returns, followed by Sysmex, the Japanese healthcare equipment company. Unilever was the biggest detractor this quarter.

Asian markets posted robust gains during the fourth quarter, continuing the strong performance seen in 2017. Equity markets across Asia and the emerging markets performed well on the back of an upturn in global economic data and solid economic performance, particularly in China. The strongest markets were China, South Korea and Australia. The Japanese economy remained positive and the government continues to implement accommodative fiscal and monetary policies. The backdrop for Asian economies remains constructive led by local consumption and supportive government policies and while inflation in the region remains low, governments can continue to maintain favourable monetary conditions. Concerns remain, however, over geopolitical risk from North Korea and U.S. protectionism and trade retaliation.

European equities also rallied in Q4 to cap off a strong year. Following its strong position mid-year, the euro stabilised over the final quarter and this coincided with renewed strength in the underlying equity market. Stocks were hampered in the U.K. for most of the year by the ruling party's failure to win a majority in June elections. This caused concern that the government would have a weaker negotiating position regarding talks to remove Britain from the European Union, however, in December, the U.K. rallied strongly relative to the rest of the world as Brexit talks advanced to the next stage. The economic environment remained robust in Germany, and improved in France and "peripheral" countries such as Spain, Italy and Portugal. Leading indicators, credit conditions and unemployment all moved in the right direction.
