Quarterly Commentary as at September 30, 2017

Q3 performance of the Canadian bond market was quite weak. The Bank of Canada (BoC) raised rates in July and in September. The market was concerned that this marked the beginning of policy normalization with steady increases pushed yields higher, approximately 0.8% in the 2 and 5 year maturities. Near the end of Q3 Governor Poloz indicated that further moves would be data dependant and that there was no predetermined path for interest rates.

In the U.S. yields were also higher for Q3, reversing the rally in August and early September. The initial rally had been driven by a mix of concerns about domestic politics, a potential government shut-down, North Korea and the economic impact from hurricanes. Towards the end of Q3, a new tax reform proposal added to growth expectations pushing yields higher.

The Fund's performance benefited from an overweight allocation to investment grade corporate bonds as investors sought higher-yielding assets perceived to come with a degree of safety. Investments in higher-risk corporate debt also contributed to performance. The Fund benefited from the higher income provided and from appreciation linked to optimism about the global economic expansion. The Fund's exposure to foreign currencies detracted value from performance as the Canadian dollar was the best performing currency for the quarter after the BoC hiked rates twice.

Looking ahead, bond yields are expected to rise, the market has penciled in rate hikes late in the fourth quarter. In addition, the U.S. Federal Reserve has begun the lengthy process of shrinking its portfolio of Treasury and mortgage notes on the balance sheet; their measured and gradual plan is intended to not disrupt fixed-income markets. Looking forward, a continued strength in non-government bonds may lead to further reductions in this area and further overall reduction in portfolio risk over Q4.
