Quarterly Commentary as at March 31, 2017

Global economic growth firmed, with a noticeable pickup in the Eurozone starting to factor into the expansion. In March, the U.S. Federal Reserve boosted its short-term benchmark interest rate for the second time in three months, reflecting optimism about the pace of the U.S. expansion. However, longer-term U.S. bond yields fell late in the period on concern that President Trump might have trouble winning approval for his economic proposals.

The Fund's overweight position in equities and underweight position in fixed income had a positive impact on performance. Canadian, U.S. and U.K. bonds posted gains, while the improved outlook for the Eurozone resulted in losses for the region's government bonds. Returns were aided by holdings in high-yield bonds, investment-grade corporate bonds and provincial bonds.

Major equity markets rose, led by Europe and emerging markets, amid optimism that economies around the world were gathering momentum. The Fund's equity allocation benefited from security selection in the developed markets of Europe and Asia and asset weighting in emerging markets. U.S. security selection had a negative impact on returns.

Leading economic indicators are at their best levels in several years, economic surprises have been overwhelmingly positive and corporate earnings are recovering. As a result, risk assets such as equities and corporate credit have performed well. We expect bond yields to rise, resulting in low or potentially negative fixed-income returns over the years ahead, and we therefore remain underweight bonds. Long-term expected returns for stocks are more attractive, accounting for our equity overweight. In the near term, however, uncertainty surrounding U.S. public policy and a variety of style and technical factors have led us to reduce our exposure to stocks, where we remain overweight, but a little less so.
