Quarterly Commentary as at June 30, 2017

The steady rise in global stocks continued through the second quarter of the year. In contrast to the first quarter, leadership emanated from global stocks, emerging markets in particular, as opposed to North American markets. Canadian stocks fell 1.6%, weighed down by commodity stocks and the effects of Bank of Canada's desire to commence rate increases in order to battle soaring home prices and a firming economy. The Fund's performance relative to its benchmark benefitted from being overweight global stocks and the outperformance of its global and Canadian holdings.

The broad based U.S. Dollar Index continued to push lower after hitting a fourteen-year high at the end of 2016 as the Trump trade wore off and global economies performed relatively well. The Canadian Dollar traded higher against most currencies outside of the Euro. The Fund continued to hedge most of its currency exposures in fixed income, and a portion of its exposures to non-Canadian stocks.

Global sovereign bond yields were mixed, with European and Canadian 10-years rising while U.S. 10-years fell. Credit markets were steady and the end result was a small positive total return. The Fund maintained a moderate underweight of bonds, along with an overweight of stocks.

At the end of last year, the thinking was that while likely that the bull run in global stocks could continue into this year, they may become more susceptible to a larger correction later in the year if the growth prospects that the markets are embedding don't materialize. There is no change to that view. As well, it is still felt that sovereign interest rates across the globe can only go so high in the current environment, and are more likely to be tranquil.
