Quarterly Commentary as at September 30, 2018

Our holding in U.S. discount retailer TJX was the biggest contributor to relative returns during the quarter. The stock performed well on the back of strong numbers allied to high quality merchandise and execution, in a generally buoyant retail environment. Taiwanese semi-conductor manufacturer TSMC appreciated after predictions for strong high-end smartphone sales in to the second half of the year. Additionally, TSMC's only major competitor in next generation 7 nanometer wafers, GlobalFoundries, said it was exiting this market segment.

Our holding in U.S. manufacturer of carpet and floor coverings, Mohawk, was the biggest detractor from relative returns during Q3 as it posted disappointing Q2 numbers, citing increased commodity, transport and labour costs. Our position in South African-based global media conglomerate Naspers also detracted as the company faced the macro headwinds of an emerging market sell-off, a weak currency, and regulation in China affecting its holding in Chinese internet stock Tencent.

In aggregate global equities delivered strong total returns in Q3. The headline story has been the impressive performance of the U.S. market whilst other markets have lagged or indeed retreated as the U.S. has seemingly advanced inexorably. The U.S. has been bolstered by strong earnings upgrades, a strong dollar on the back of rising interest rates, and the beneficial impact of tax cuts at corporate and individual level. Europe continues to suffer from Brexit-driven uncertainty in the UK and inconclusive election results in Italy, Germany and Sweden; Japan has also been hit by the U.S./China trade tensions and weather-related issues; and emerging markets have entered bear territory.

As always the team remains committed to the discovery of companies that we deem to be future success stories. We are constantly searching for compelling long-term opportunities at the right valuations whilst avoiding those businesses that are overvalued or optically cheap but fundamentally flawed.
