Quarterly Commentary as at September 30, 2017

The third quarter was characterized by further U.S. dollar weakness, and while emerging market currencies generally strengthened over that period, only a handful outperformed the Canadian dollar. This explains the negative returns for the asset class to Canadian investors.

Enthusiasm for emerging market assets continues to underpin strength in currencies of Eastern European, Asian and Latin American countries. Improvements in economic data have been fairly broad-based across regions while at the same time inflationary pressures have moderated, particularly in Latin America. This lends credibility to policy frameworks and has been among the many reasons why sentiment indicators show investors to retain their risk-seeking behaviour.

Going forward, focus will likely shift toward some important event risks, including the Chinese National Congress meetings in mid-October, the U.S. Federal Reserve's first measured reduction in its balance sheet and a number of elections in emerging nations. We remain selective about which currencies to own and favour countries with more stable external funding, contained fiscal pressures and reduced political uncertainty. In general, we are still constructive on emerging market currencies, especially relative to the Canadian dollar.
