Quarterly Commentary as at September 30, 2018

Our holding in U.S. discount retailer TJX was the biggest contributor to relative returns during the quarter. The stock performed well on the back of strong numbers allied to high quality merchandise and execution, in a generally buoyant retail environment. U.S. I.T. consulting firm Gartner also performed well as the stock rose after the market reacted very positively to a decent set of Q2 results.

Our holding in Indian financial HDFC Bank was the biggest detractor from relative returns in the third quarter. The company was a casualty of the prolonged emerging market sell-off and a weaker Indian Rupee. Belgium-listed global brewer AB InBev hurt performance as the company has faced emerging market volatility, especially from its significant Brazilian and South African market exposure.

In aggregate global equities delivered strong total returns in Q3. The headline story has been the impressive performance of the U.S. market whilst other markets have lagged or indeed retreated as the U.S. has seemingly advanced inexorably. The U.S. has been bolstered by strong earnings upgrades, a strong dollar on the back of rising interest rates, and the beneficial impact of tax cuts at corporate and individual level. Europe continues to suffer from Brexit-driven uncertainty in the UK and inconclusive election results in Italy, Germany and Sweden; Japan has also been hit by the U.S./China trade tensions and weather-related issues; and emerging markets have entered bear territory.

As always the team remains committed to the discovery of companies that we deem to be future success stories. We are constantly searching for compelling long-term opportunities at the right valuations whilst avoiding those businesses that are overvalued or optically cheap but fundamentally flawed.
