Quarterly Commentary as at March 31, 2017

U.S. computer games developer Activision Blizzard was the quarter's biggest contributor on the back of strong numbers. The second was Kite Pharma, U.S. pharmaceutical that has concluded a very successful trial of its main cancer treatment. It was followed by Indian HDFC Bank as the realisation grew that India's demonetisation programme should actually prove beneficial to Indian banks.

The biggest detractor was U.S. Materials name CF Industries, which produces nitrogen-based fertilisers. However, given energy is a major input cost low energy prices should actually prove beneficial over the longer term. U.S. onshore oil producer EOG Resources was the second biggest detractor, again on weakness in the oil price.

In a quarter where we have witnessed an average year's worth of returns in just three months, it is not universally clear what has been driving this strong performance in equity markets. Clearly the growth outlook is improving although we are unsure if this will be enough to sustain market returns at similar levels in coming quarters.

Why? There are some obvious roadblocks ahead: it is unlikely that the Trump administration will be able to legislate as radically or as quickly as initially thought; China has still to grapple with loose money supply and the ongoing property bubble; and Europe is veiled in political uncertainty with critical elections on the horizon in France and Germany alongside negotiations for the UK's exit from the European Union.

As always the RBC Global Equity team attempts to navigate this uncertain backdrop by investing only in those companies that we deem to be future success stories. We are constantly searching for compelling long-term opportunities at the right valuations whilst avoiding those businesses that are overvalued or optically cheap but fundamentally flawed.
