Quarterly Commentary as at June 30, 2018

Global equity markets continued to be volatile in Q2. Markets have been buffeted by a string of macro factors including an escalating trade war between the U.S. and China now extended to the EU and Canada, a substantial slump in Chinese equity prices and a reversal of the positivity toward Europe early in 2018. Against this, there remained a strong bid for some of the largest U.S. technology names and the buoyant oil price was supportive of energy companies.

Our holding in U.S. onshore oil exploration and production company, EOG Resources Inc., was the biggest contributor to relative returns this quarter. The stock rose on continued operational performance and a supportive oil price. U.S. bank, Silicon Valley Bank, which is an early-stage lender to high-tech companies, also performed well, rising over 20% in the quarter after posting some impressive numbers. U.S. discount retailer, TJX Companies Inc., advanced on strong year-on-year same-store sales growth.

Our holding in German logistics company, Deutsche Post DHL group, was the biggest detractor from relative returns this quarter. The stock fell after the company reported weaker-than-expected results as its postal and supply chain weakness offset strong numbers from its express delivery division. Management also announced reduced earnings guidance on restructuring costs. Taiwanese semiconductor manufacturer, Taiwan Semiconductor Manufacturing Company Ltd., also detracted after the stock fell following disappointing Q1 results and reduced guidance on projected smartphone demand. Another top detractor was U.S. biotech company, Incyte Corp., which sold off markedly after a disappointing trial result for one of its cancer combination compounds.

As always, the team remains committed to the discovery of companies that we deem to be future success stories. We are constantly searching for compelling long-term opportunities at the right valuations while avoiding businesses that are overvalued or optically cheap, but fundamentally flawed.
