Quarterly Commentary as at June 30, 2017

U.S. domiciled alternative asset manager, Blackstone, was the biggest contributor over the quarter. Intuit, the U.S. developer of personal and small business accounting software, was the second biggest. Concerns over lower levels of U.S. tax filing abated, alongside the potential benefits the gig economy will give to personal accounting tool providers. Intercontinental was the third largest contributor as its asset-light business model continues to deliver.

TJX, the U.S. discount retailer, was the biggest detractor during Q2. Traditional U.S. retail is under threat from online alternatives and shopping mall traffic is falling, however we believe that TJX retains a unique business model and we continue to favour it. EOG Resources, the U.S. onshore oil producer, was the second biggest detractor as its share price has suffered from falling oil prices. CF Industries was the third largest detractor amid concerns about pricing power for the company's products.

With the notable exception of the UK, much of the political uncertainty that has dominated the headlines over the last 12 months appears to be receding. Against this more settled backdrop, global equities continued to perform well during Q2, with earnings resolutely strong. Bond yields have remained at historically low levels and the U.S. dollar has been weak, both these factors adding impetus to the search for high quality businesses with predictable and growing earnings. Towards the end of the quarter, however, several of the world's largest central banks began to hint at policy tightening.

We remain committed to the discovery of companies that we deem to be future success stories. We are constantly searching for compelling long-term opportunities at the right valuations whilst avoiding those businesses that are overvalued or optically cheap but fundamentally flawed.
