Quarterly Commentary as at June 30, 2017

In the equity portion, security selection in the Financial sector boosted relative performance with Brookfield Asset Management a strong contributor. Although bank stocks pulled back amid concerns around the housing market and news flow around mortgage lender Home Capital Group, they are still positive on the year. The Utility sector was a solid contributor and an overweight in Energy equities added to performance, which was helped by the Fund's position in Veresen, which benefited from the agreement to combine with Pembina Pipelines at a premium.

The Canadian economy strengthened over the first half of 2017, all but eliminating the need for the Bank of Canada (BoC) to cut short-term interest rates. However, yields trended lower and bonds recovered most of the losses following the 2016 U. S. election, as it appeared that the Trump administration would struggle to enact legislation.

The Fund's performance benefited from an overweight allocation to investment-grade corporate bonds and provincial fixed-income securities, as investors sought higher-yielding assets with perceived safety. These securities offered alternatives to federal-government securities, whose yields were suppressed, in part from large-scale asset purchases by central banks in Europe and Japan.

The BoC has begun raising short-term interest rates from the exceptionally low level in place since 2015. Long-maturity bonds are likely to move higher as economic growth improves and inflation rises. The Fund will continue to devote relatively fewer of its assets to Government of Canada bonds in favour of provincial and corporate issues, as long as economic growth persists at a clip that rewards investors holding higher-risk securities.
