Quarterly Commentary as at June 30, 2018

European markets had their strongest quarter since Q1 2017, which resulted in the recovery of most first-quarter losses. This occurred despite geopolitical events continuing to create volatility across global markets.

The protectionist trade policies pursued by U.S. President Trump, which has crystallized in a nascent trade war with China, was accompanied by the installation of a populist political coalition in Italy with promises to boost government spending. Brexit-centred uncertainty persisted from both a political and business perspective, with economic growth in the United Kingdom continuing to lag the rest of Europe.

European macro data plateaued after first-quarter declines and, at their current level, are still consistent with double-digit earnings growth. Leading indicators have begun to roll over; although this is not necessarily bearish for the market as a whole, it can have implications for sector rotation.

Data seems to suggest further earnings growth is possible while, from a valuation perspective, market price-to-earnings ratios are close to fair value and dividend yields in all markets look attractive relative to bond yields.

At a sector level, our position in Energy was the standout positive contributor whereas the position in Financials was an offsetting negative.

The largest individual contributor was our position in Royal Dutch Shell plc, followed by the second-largest contributor, Burberry Group PLC. The largest detractors were Pandora Jewelry A/S and Continental AG.

While we are, as always, cognizant of the wider macro environment, our focus remains on the discipline of long-term investing in companies with strong competitive positions, low capital intensity, sustainable and/or improving profitability.
