Quarterly Commentary as at March 31, 2017

The Energy sector delivered weak quarterly performance as the oil price was unable to maintain the momentum it had achieved in Q4 following OPEC's agreement to cut production by a total of about 2%. In hindsight, it appears that analyst expectations were overly bullish in regards to how quickly global inventories would recede from oversupplied conditions to more normal levels. An unrelenting ramp-up in drilling rig activity levels in the U.S. further worried the market that increased supply, particularly from the Permian Basin, would offset any benefits. U.S. natural gas prices fell sharply from their year-end highs as weather became unsupportive and on concerns that associated gas production from oil wells would create supply/demand imbalances.

The Fund's relative performance versus the benchmark was negatively impacted by underweight positions in global integrated oil companies, which are more resilient in falling energy prices. Crew Energy, QEP Resources and Birchcliff Energy were among the Fund's worst E&P performers. Oil field service names including Patterson-UTI and Trican Well Services gave back much of their Q4 gains. These losses were partially offset by robust performance from Geopark and Parex Resources as both companies had significant exploration drilling success.

In late May, OPEC will meet again to discuss extending their previous agreement to maintain production at 32.5 million barrels. In the near term, geo-political events including the U.S.'s involvement in Syria and increased rhetoric against Russia and Iran could provide a floor to oil prices, however the market will be focused on seeing actual U.S. inventory improvements now that refinery maintenance season has ended. Our approach remains to invest in companies with high quality assets, strong management teams and the ability to finance growth projects.
