Quarterly Commentary as at March 31, 2018

During the quarter, the Energy sector consolidated the strong gains it achieved in the fourth quarter of 2017. Quarter-over-quarter, spot oil prices rose 7.5%, closing at a healthy $65 per barrel. Robust consumer demand for crude and petroleum products as well as strong compliance by OPEC members to previously announced cuts have helped to chip away at U.S and global stockpiles. Tensions in the Middle East, particularly involving Saudi Arabia and Iran, have also provided support. Natural gas prices were volatile in the quarter, rising sharply in January on colder-than-expected weather, but then giving back all gains.

The Fund's relative performance versus the benchmark was positively impacted by exposure to high-quality exploration and production companies, which rallied on crude oil's gains. Overweight positions in Galp Energia SGPS SA, RSP Permian Inc., Concho Resources Inc. and Diamondback Energy Inc. were among the largest contributors to performance while an underweight position in Exxon Mobil Corp., which underperformed the benchmark, also contributed. Overweight positions in Encana Corp. and Trican Well Services Ltd. were among the largest detractors from value-add while underweight positions in Statoil ASA and Anadarko Petroleum Corp. also hampered relative performance.

OPEC's November extension limits oil production until the end of 2018, which is certainly helping to accelerate inventory rebalancing. Inventories are also anticipated to gradually return to normalized levels by the second half of 2018, even with incremental growth in U.S. on-shore basins, particularly the Permian. Barring an unexpected outcome from OPEC's upcoming meeting to reassess production cuts in June, the Fund's portfolio manager sees the potential for gains in oil prices and energy-equity prices during 2018. The portfolio manager's approach remains to invest in companies with high-quality assets, strong management and the ability to finance growth projects.
