Quarterly Commentary as at March 31, 2017

In the first quarter of 2017, the MSCI Japan Total Return Index returned 3.9%. In local currency terms however, Japanese markets recorded substantial losses as the Yen rallied 5.4% against the U.S. dollar, likely due to the unwind of the initial euphoria surrounding a Trump-induced cyclical recovery in global equity markets.

The Consumer Discretionary and Industrials sectors were the leading contributors to Fund performance during the past quarter. The top absolute contributor was Yahoo Japan Corporation, Japan's leading web portal and internet services provider. Another bright spot for the Fund was industrial equipment manufacturer SMC whose earnings growth has been supported by a recovery of machinery orders both domestically and abroad. Elsewhere, shares of tire maker Bridgestone rallied in response to the company's announcement of substantial price hikes as well as a 6.5% share buyback.

On the contrary, stock selection in the Health Care sector as well as an underweight weighting in Materials, detracted from Fund performance.

Japanese equity markets have been surprisingly resilient despite the recent strengthening of the yen against the U.S. dollar. The yen outlook remains critical for the outlook of corporate earnings and capex. While the Bank of Japan (BoJ) would like to maintain a weak yen, external global forces could lead to a strengthening of the yen, which would be a strong threat to corporate profitability.

The Japanese economy is being held up by continued accommodative fiscal and monetary policies. Economic growth for 2017 is projected to be 1.0% while inflation has continued to undershoot the BoJ's 2.0% inflation target. Looking ahead, we expect U.S. president to direct much of his energy at China's trade relationship with the U.S., but there can be no guarantee that Japan will remain unscathed.
