Quarterly Commentary as at September 30, 2017

High yield bond prices rose slightly during the third quarter, with returns coming mostly from the coupon, while Treasury yields ended the quarter barely higher than where they started. Meanwhile, key supports for the high yield market remained in place. Oil prices began to recover from the lows of mid-June, credit conditions were benign, corporate health continued to improve slightly, the net supply of newly issued bonds remained manageable, and the corporate default rate fell. In a reversal from the second quarter, lower rated bonds outperformed the higher rated segments of the market. The Fund maintained its overall defensive positioning during the quarter but reduced its cash holdings, and used the proceeds to buy higher rated high yield bonds. The Fund benefitted from its exposure to high yield bonds in general, while its conservative cash position reduced volatility but also served as a drag on performance.

Demand for yield and a healthy economic backdrop should continue to support corporate bonds. Given that central banks are beginning to lean toward tighter monetary policies, we believe that high-yield corporate bonds remain attractive relative to other fixed-income assets. However, it is likely that future returns will be lower than those experienced in the recent past as valuations become less compelling and possible headwinds emerge. This extended credit cycle may continue for a while yet. We intend to closely monitor the credit quality of the Fund, and look to add attractively valued bonds as they become available.
