Quarterly Commentary as at March 31, 2017

The first quarter of 2017 proved to be a strong quarter for emerging market equities on the back of U.S dollar weakness and fading conviction that the U.S. administration could implement trade sanctions.

At the sector level, stock selection within the Information Technology sector was a key detractor of returns, however, this was mitigated by strong stock selection in the Materials sector.

At the county level, stock selection was particularly strong in Thailand, though weaker in Taiwan and India. However an overweight position in the latter offset some of the negative impact.

Looking ahead, several factors should continue to support emerging-market equity performance over the medium term. First, emerging-market currencies are undervalued versus the U.S. dollar, and any appreciation in emerging-market currencies would be positive for emerging-market equities. Second, the earnings outlook for emerging markets relative to developed markets is improving, and relatively fast growth in emerging markets is a positive sign for their stock markets especially given improved productivity and economic reforms. Finally, valuations for emerging markets remain attractive relative to developed markets following the significant underperformance of emerging markets over the past six years.
