Quarterly Commentary as at March 31, 2018

Worldwide trade suffered a setback in the first quarter of 2018 as U.S. President Trump threatened to impose trade tariffs on China and, to a lesser degree, allies in Europe and North America. However, economic growth remained robust in most areas of the world.

Global government bonds posted modest returns overall, benefiting investors seeking safety. In the first part of the quarter, government-bond yields surged, driven by synchronized economic growth. However, yields reversed starting in mid-February amid trade tensions between the U.S. and China. Government of Canada bonds posted marginal gains in the period. The Bank of Canada raised short-term interest rates as expected in January. However, the Canadian central bank remained cautious about further hikes, citing relatively high household debt levels, tighter mortgage rules and uncertainty over NAFTA renegotiation.

Four of the Fund's six investments contributed positively to performance, including PH&N Short Term Bond & Mortgage Fund and RBC Emerging Markets Bond Fund. However, RBC Global Corporate Bond Fund and RBC High Yield Bond Fund had a negative impact on returns.

The portfolio manager expects global bond yields to rise slowly with short-term yields continuing to rise faster than those on longer-term bonds. The portfolio manager also expects the U.S. Federal Reserve to continue tightening while the European Central Bank and Bank of Japan should roll back their easing, given the upbeat growth outlook, which is likely to push bond yields higher. However, trade issues may increase uncertainty, which would hold down yields in the near term.
