Quarterly Commentary as at June 30, 2017

Emerging Market bonds continued to enjoy strong returns in Q2. The Fund continued to benefit from the increase in longer maturity bonds added at the end of last year but was hurt by its lower weighting in poorer quality bonds which outperformed higher quality bonds. We have trimmed the longer maturity bonds in the Fund as the backdrop for global interest rates is poised to turn higher.

The U.S. Federal Reserve, the European Central Bank and even the Bank of Canada began indicating plans to raise rates and the first two have raised expectation they will begin trimming their investments of government bonds built up over the past several years in order to suppress rates and buttress growth. As rates rise bond prices fall with longer maturity bonds falling proportionately more. We have reduced holdings in some longer maturity bonds in places such as Russia, Mexico, Turkey and Indonesia which had done very well in the first half.

Recent bond issues by Belarus, the Maldives and 100 year maturity bonds by Argentina indicate that emerging market bonds have become somewhat frothy. We have reduced our holdings of some similarly risky African credits where economic conditions continue to be poor or which are more vulnerable to weaker commodity prices. We expect Chinese growth to slow as the year advances and demand for commodities and other emerging market exports may weaken. For this reason we have reduced our exposure to Latin America in favour of Europe and among riskier credits are emphasizing those which have established programs with the International Monetary Fund which fosters good economic policy.
