Quarterly Commentary as at March 31, 2017

The U.S. stock market continued to surge higher in the first quarter, extending the rally that began a little over a year ago. Similar to the fourth quarter of 2016, the most recent three-month period featured strong rotations in sectors and style. The start of 2017 has been highlighted by strength in growth over value and a general reversal in sector performance, as Technology and Consumer Discretionary led the way, and Energy and Telecommunication Services lagged.

Energy dragged down index performance due to weaker oil prices. Concern about OPEC compliance and rising rig counts contributed to weakness. We continue to believe in the long-term success of energy companies with strong, sustainable balance sheets, while also exhibiting healthy levels of free cash flow.

The Fund outperformed its benchmark in the first quarter, and the majority of returns were generated via strong security selection. A diversified set of security positions within Technology resulted in this sector being the largest contributor to relative returns. The Fund's overweight position in leading global diversified semiconductor company Broadcom was the leading contributor to relative returns, with a promising outlook given healthy product demand.

Within Internet Software & Services, the Fund's position in Facebook was among the largest contributors to relative performance, as the company successfully monetized user engagement through advertising revenue.

Market performance going forward will depend on tangible evidence in the form of increased economic activity and better-than-expected corporate earnings. While some of the market's advance must be attributed to anticipation of pro-growth policy action, the fundamentals are also doing their part to drive the market higher.
