Quarterly Commentary as at September 30, 2018

U.S. equity markets generally outperformed other major markets in the third quarter of 2018, as soaring confidence in the economic outlook and corporate-profit growth fueled the ascent. The U.S. economy has accelerated to its fastest growth rate in four years, bolstered by large-scale tax cuts and increased government spending. We continue to believe that the speed limit for developed-world growth has increased since the global financial crisis, with confidence among businesses and consumers restored.

Our analysis of a variety of scenarios suggests that stocks can deliver decent upside with reasonable assumptions, as long as earnings continue to come through as analysts expect. We recognize, however, that given the late stage in the business cycle and the fact that valuations are above equilibrium, earnings growth is now critical to sustaining the bull market in stocks.
