Quarterly Commentary as at December 31, 2017

The U.S. stock market rose over the quarter on the back of solid returns from cyclical sectors. The strong overall performance was driven by the continuation of the synchronized global economic expansion, still accommodative global central-bank policy and low market interest rates and inflation, which drove U.S. corporate profits. Tax reform also helped to lift investor sentiment late in the year. The expanding economy led the U.S. Federal Reserve to raise interest rates during the period, bringing the total count of rate hikes to three for 2017.

The best-performing index sectors were Consumer Discretionary, Information Technology and Financials. The worst-performing were Telecommunication Services, Health Care and Utilities.

Effective October 3, 2017, the Fund was invested primarily in units of RBC U.S. Equity Index ETF.
