Quarterly Commentary as at March 31, 2017

In Q1, the FTSE TMX Canada Universe Bond Index returned 1.2%. The FTSE TMX Canada Corporate Bond Index (1.8%) and the FTSE TMX Canada Provincial Bond Index (1.4%) both outperformed the FTSE TMX Canada Federal Bond Index (0.6%) as corporate bonds benefited from improving economic fundamentals.

First quarter results were positive, reversing much of the U.S. election-driven selloff that occurred near the end of 2016. The shift in part reflected investor skepticism that the new administrations would be able to deliver on the president's election promises to cut taxes, boost infrastructure spending and scale back business regulation. The U.S. Federal Reserve (Fed) has raised short rates twice, while longer term Government bond yields remain range bound, pricing in neither the worst or best outcome. The Bank of Canada (BoC) maintained its cautious tone and as expected did not change policy rates.

While the portfolio manager expects the BoC to keep its benchmark interest rate unchanged over the next 12 months despite better economic data, Governor Poloz is likely to emphasize downside risks and possible disappointment regarding exports. The red hot housing market remains a major worry in Vancouver and Toronto where new measures are expected shortly to try and curb enthusiasm.

The Fed in the U.S. is expected to continue raising policy rates and could begin to reduce its balance sheet later this year which could pressure bond yields higher. Canadian government bonds will likely outperform their U.S. counterparts given that the BoC is likely to keep interest rates unchanged.
