Quarterly Commentary as at December 31, 2017

Canadian bonds posted modest gains in the fourth quarter of 2017, as the Bank of Canada (BoC) became more cautious given uncertainty surrounding the survival of the North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA) and concern about the impact of new mortgage rules on the national housing market. Securities maturing in 10 or more years outperformed shorter-term fixed income because of heightened demand from investors for the income provided by longer-term debt. Fund performance benefited from an overweight allocation to longer maturity Canadian bonds and holding more Canada Mortgage bonds as the returns were higher than similar dated Government of Canada bonds.

Looking ahead, the global economy continues to expand at a healthy pace and the direction of monetary policy is gradually changing. Concerted policy tightening by major central banks is expected to gather pace over the next year and is likely to push bond yields higher. Moreover, a decrease in asset purchases by central banks should start exerting upward pressure on yields. The BoC should be cautious on further rate hikes due to the uncertainty on NAFTA negotiation, the impact of the new mortgage rules and higher rates on highly indebted households. However, Canadian government bonds will likely continue to outperform their U.S. counterparts given that the U.S. Federal Reserve appears poised to continue raising rates and shrinking its balance sheet while the BoC indicates that it's in no rush to do so.
