Quarterly Commentary as at June 30, 2017

Global high yield and emerging market bonds continued to enjoy strong returns in Q2.

Key supports for high yield bonds remained in place, as credit conditions remained benign, corporate health continued to stabilize, the net supply of newly issued bonds remained very manageable and the corporate default rate remained low. In a reversal from Q1, higher quality high yield bonds outperformed the lower rated segments of the market, and the renewed weakness in the price of oil during Q2 put pressure on the energy sector and caused it to underperform. The Fund slightly increased the credit quality of its holdings during Q2, and sold some shorter-dated, higher quality bonds that offered limited potential for gains.

The emerging market bond component continued to benefit from the increase in longer maturity bonds added at the end of last year but was hurt by its lower weighting in poorer quality bonds which outperformed higher quality bonds. We have trimmed the longer maturity bonds in the Fund as the backdrop for global interest rates is poised to turn higher.

Demand for higher bond yields and a healthy economic backdrop should continue to support high yield and emerging market bonds. However, it is likely that future returns will be lower than those experienced in the recent past. We expect Chinese growth to slow as the year advances and demand for commodities and other emerging market exports may weaken. We have made some adjustments to the emerging market component to reflect this view. We intend to closely monitor the credit quality of the portfolio, and look to add attractively valued bonds as they become available.
