Quarterly Commentary as at June 30, 2017

The economic uptick that took root last year has continued to bloom and a synchronized global economic expansion is at hand, with leading indicators pointing to a faster-than-normal clip across much of the world.

The Fund's overweight position in equities and underweight position in fixed income had a negative impact on performance. Global bond yields rose in June, reversing the trend in place since late 2016, as more central banks joined the U.S. in signaling that monetary policy would be tightened. The Fund's fixed-income portion benefited from exposure to the RBC Global Corporate Bond Fund and the RBC Bond Fund.

U.S. stocks rose, despite some deterioration in U.S. economic data, amid robust earnings growth. Canadian stocks underperformed other major global equity markets due to Canada's significant exposure to resource stocks. The portfolio's returns were held back by the Phillips, Hager &

North Canadian Income Fund, partially offset by the RBC QUBE U.S. Equity Fund.

The portfolio manager is budgeting for a bit faster global economic growth over the next few years than has been the case in the recent past, and expects bond yields to rise over the long term. However, fading confidence in President Trump's ability to bolster growth and generate faster inflation has recently weighed on yields, reintroducing the fixed-income valuation risk that had been alleviated shortly after the election. U.S. profit growth is recovering from a two-year decline and, if earnings continue to rise as analysts expect, the total-return potential for stocks remains quite positive. However, the portfolio manager has gradually begun to dial back the Fund's overweight exposure to equities given the aging business cycle, less compelling valuations and concern that complacency is beginning to seep into markets.
