Quarterly Commentary as at September 30, 2018

Overall sector allocation and security selection effects hurt returns during the quarter. Energy and Health Care were the top contributors to allocation effects. Meanwhile, Materials and Financials were the top detractors. Materials and Energy were the top contributors to selection effects. Meanwhile, Health Care and Financials the top detractors.

A large overweight allocation to the Value factor was the largest detractor from returns, hurting performance for the quarter. An overweight allocation to Momentum was a positive contributor, but a smaller size orientation also hurt performance. Quality exposures had a negative impact in aggregate as high-quality names underperformed.

Our research of individual stock data leads us to believe that Value, Momentum, and Quality are themes that are critically important to future outperformance. We consistently avoid sectors and industries that exhibit unfavorable characteristics, and hone in on areas of the market that are favorable in the ways we deem relevant. Given the portfolio's positioning relative to its benchmark—measured by key characteristics we use in our stock selection process—we believe the portfolio is well situated for the rest of 2018.
