Quarterly Commentary as at June 30, 2018

Overall allocation and selection effects aided returns for the quarter. Security selection within Information Technology, Consumer Discretionary, and Energy detracted from returns, while security selection within Health Care, Financials, and Consumer Staples contributed to returns. An underweight allocation to Energy contributed to performance, while an overweight allocation to Telecom detracted from performance.

From a country perspective, overall allocation detracted from returns while overall security selection contributed to returns. Security selection within the United States, Canada and Denmark aided returns while security selection in Israel, Japan and France detracted. An underweight allocation to Japan and Germany also contributed to performance while overweight allocations to South Africa and Italy detracted from performance.

From a factor perspective, Earnings Growth, Value and Momentum underperformed on the period. However, Shareholder Yield, Financial Strength and Earnings Quality outperformed. Industry and country exposures contributed negatively.

Compared to the strategy benchmark, our focus on Value, Yield, Momentum and Quality has allowed us to construct a portfolio trading at substantial discounts on various valuation metrics. Our research of individual stock data leads us to believe that Value, Yield, Momentum and Quality are critically important to future outperformance. We consistently avoid sectors and industries that exhibit unfavourable characteristics and overweight areas of the market that are favourable in the ways we deem important. Given the portfolio's positioning relative to its benchmark – measured by key characteristics we use in our stock selection process – we believe the portfolio is well situated for the rest of 2018.
