Quarterly Commentary as at June 30, 2017

A synchronized global economic expansion appears to be at hand. That said, the initial acceleration phase has arguably ended and risk assets are rising with less vigor than at the turn of the year. Strong performances from the Health Care, Industrials and Financials sectors powered the advance, while returns in the Energy and Telecommunication Services sectors were a drag.

During the quarter, security selection drove positive performance, particularly in Information Technology and Industrials. An overweight position in Adobe Systems boosted performance. Adobe has a near-monopoly on software for professional digital content creation. The company has successfully transitioned from selling one-time licenses to monthly subscriptions. In Industrials, Ingersoll-Rand has been a top-performing stock, as their company-wide productivity enhancement initiative is reaping benefits.

While the broad-based commodity shock has subsidized, oil prices continue to be under pressure. They are difficult to forecast in the short run, but remain below our marginal cost estimate. We continue to believe that large companies with long-life reserves and strong balance sheets should deliver attractive levels of free cash flow as crude prices recover to the marginal cost of production.

The Information Technology sector along with Amazon and Netflix (Consumer Discretionary stocks) have generated roughly two-thirds of the S&P 500's gain this year.

Looking forward, our base case scenario is that the economy will continue to expand slowly and that interest rates will rise gradually. We believe it's reasonable to expect further gains in equities and, if profits rise as analysts expect, total return potential for stocks is still positive.
