Quarterly Commentary as at June 30, 2017

The Fund's negative return this quarter was the result of a flattening yield curve, where short-term interest rates increased considerably more than longer term rates. The reason for this is because their shorter-term nature aligns them closer to the Bank of Canada's overnight target rate, which the market anticipates will increase in the very near future. The Fund, from a strategic standpoint, was well positioned for this development by employing a short duration versus its benchmark throughout the quarter. This strategy was a key contributor to the Fund's outperformance compared to its benchmark, which suffered even more as a result of rising short-term rates this quarter.

From a credit standpoint, our view remained cautious during the quarter. The Fund maintained a minimal corporate overweight position as corporate spreads continued to tighten modestly. We would like to see better valuations (i.e., higher yield spreads) in corporate bonds before taking more meaningful positions. In government credit, we continue to prefer federal government agency bonds and government-guaranteed mortgage-backed securities (MBS) over provincial bonds. This view neither helped nor hurt the Fund's performance materially this quarter.

The Fund's major out-of-benchmark strategy remains its allocation to commercial mortgages, which continues to offer an attractive yield in a sector that we understand well and have a long track record of conservatively investing in.
