Quarterly Commentary as at June 30, 2017

U.S. stocks rose, despite some deterioration in U.S. economic data, amid robust earnings growth. The strong macroeconomic backdrop overcame dwindling prospects for President Trump's promised tax reforms, higher infrastructure spending and regulatory rollbacks. The expanding economy led the U.S. Federal Reserve (Fed) to raise interest rates during the period, and it has boosted the benchmark rate twice in the past six months. The Fed also said it plans to begin reducing its US$4.5 trillion balance sheet, a further sign that the U.S. central bank is abandoning the extraordinary economic stimulus that has been in place since the financial crisis.

The Fund underperformed its benchmark, the Russell 3000 Index, during the period. The portfolio's Large Cap and Mid Cap Value sleeves detracted from returns, offset by the Large Cap and Mid Cap Growth strategies. The Fund's Small Cap components were a drag on performance.

The portfolio manager is budgeting for a bit faster global economic growth over the next few years than has been the case in the past. Recent data suggests the global economy is still expanding, slowly and from a low level. Credit conditions remain highly supportive of the economy and the market, and risks of a recession in the U.S. appear low. Profit growth is recovering from a two-year decline and, if earnings continue to rise as analysts expect, the total-return potential for stocks remains quite positive.
