Quarterly Commentary as at March 31, 2017

Both asset allocation and security selection added to relative performance with the latter contributing the most.

At the asset allocation level, our underweight position in energy was the largest contributor. The zero position in Utilities was the largest detractor.

Security selection within the Health Care and Materials sector contributed the most to relative performance whereas selection with the industrials sector was the biggest detractor. At the stock level, our overweight position in Csl was the largest contributor. Our overweight position in Brambles Limited was the largest detractor.

In Europe's current environment, domestically exposed stocks may return to favour, with those exhibiting highest potential growth in revenue emerging as winners. Our focus remains on the discipline of long-term investing in companies with strong competitive positions, low capital intensity, sustainable and/or improving profitability and the right management strategy and governance structures.

We are increasingly cautious given heightened geopolitical risks involving North Korea. Economies with large trade surpluses versus the U.S. are most vulnerable – primarily the industrial exporters of North Asia given the possibility of a U.S. border-adjustment tax. The domestically driven economies of South Asia are more defensive, but in reality, rising protectionism will hamper most economic linkages that now exist in all regional economies. Japanese equity markets have been surprisingly resilient despite the recent strengthening of the yen. While the Bank of Japan would like to maintain a weak yen, external global forces could lead to a continued strengthening of the currency, which would threaten corporate profits.
