Quarterly Commentary as at December 31, 2017

U.S. money markets were enthralled by the prospects of fiscal stimulus in the New Year as a new corporate tax cut plan was voted through in Washington D.C. Layered over the already strengthening economic recovery, prospects for fiscal stimulus propelling the U.S. economy further were strong enough to entice the U.S. Federal Reserve (Fed) to tighten monetary policy again during the quarter by 0.25%, and prepare the markets for additional rounds of tightening during 2018. This pressured market yields to the upside. With indications of labor markets tightening, tax cuts in the New Year, jubilant equity markets and strong consumer sentiment, market rates moved quickly to price in expectations of tighter policy.

U.S. money market yields jumped approximately 0.35% during the quarter. Activity in the Fund focused on maintaining adequate stores of liquidity while maximizing book yield through occasional investments further out the curve. The Fund's overall composition continued to favor securitized paper, as corporate issuance was weak. Exposure to government paper increased as provincial yields were attractive relative to bank and corporate paper. The Fund's average term to maturity fell in anticipation of one more rate hike towards the end of the quarter, but then rose again after the increase was announced and reinvestment opportunities became more available at higher levels.

The U.S. economy continues to recover, and prospects of additional fiscal stimulus leave the Fed with little choice but to hold firm to its policy of normalizing interest rates, and increasing its targeted Fed funds rate. In tandem with a broad global economic recovery, U.S. wage and potentially other inflation pressures are expected to mount, which will gradually push U.S. money market yields higher over the medium term. Accordingly, we expect a more defensive posture for the Fund to be our base case.
