Quarterly Commentary as at March 31, 2018

The U.S. stock market made slightly below-average progress this past quarter, rising 1.7% (in CAD terms). Strong performances from the information Technology and Consumer Discretionary sectors powered the advance while the interest-rate-sensitive Utilities, Real Estate, Telecommunication Services and Consumer Staples sectors, along with the economically sensitive Materials and Energy sectors, were detractors.

The S&P 500 Index is on track to generate over 15% earnings growth in 2018, thanks to reasonably strong global growth, a weaker U.S. dollar, rising oil prices and a lower corporate income tax rate.

During the quarter, security selection in the Industrials and Financials sectors aided returns. In Industrials, a large position in the Boeing Co. generated strong returns following exceptional financial results. Overweight positions in JP Morgan Chase & Co. and Bank of America Corp. boosted returns in the Financials sector as the market rewarded banks for strong earnings growth and the prospect of large capital returns.

Conversely, security selection in Consumer Staples and Health Care detracted. In Staples, an overweight of Altria Group Inc. detracted this quarter. Altria Group engages in the manufacturing and sale of cigarettes, smokeless products and wine in the United States. In Health Care, an overweight in Biogen Inc. detracted this quarter. Biogen is one of the world's leading biotechnology companies with a focus on neurology and autoimmune diseases. Future stock performance will likely depend on clinical trial success, competition and pricing pressure.

Stocks continue to be supported by strong corporate-profit growth, but rising interest rates and ongoing trade conflicts have introduced increased risk and volatility into markets. Given the strong performance over the past nine years, investors should temper their expectations going forward.
