Quarterly Commentary as at March 31, 2017

The value rally in Europe that was the hallmark of last year's second half seems to have paused, and investor sentiment appears to have been buoyed recently by the strengthening of corporate profitability and return to growth and the expectation of a more benign fiscal outlook. This was despite continuing questions around political stability with the potential for disruptions, particularly in France and Italy. Asian equities gained during the first quarter of 2017, driven by faster global economic growth and an improving outlook for developing economies. In Japan, demand for value and cyclical stocks extended into the first quarter, albeit to a lesser extent than in the previous three-month period.

The Fund benefited from security selection in the Health Care and Materials sectors, partially offset by the negative impact of security selection in the Industrials and Financials sectors.

In Europe's current environment, domestically exposed stocks may return to favour, with those exhibiting highest potential growth in revenue emerging as winners. Our focus remains on the discipline of long-term investing in companies with strong competitive positions, low capital intensity, sustainable and/or improving profitability and the right management strategy and governance structures.

We are increasingly cautious given heightened geopolitical risks involving North Korea. Economies with large trade surpluses versus the U.S. are most vulnerable – primarily the industrial exporters of North Asia given the possibility of a U.S. border-adjustment tax. The domestically driven economies of South Asia are more defensive, but in reality, rising protectionism will hamper most economic linkages that now exist in all regional economies. Japanese equity markets have been surprisingly resilient despite the recent strengthening of the yen. While the Bank of Japan would like to maintain a weak yen, external global forces could lead to a continued strengthening of the currency, which would threaten corporate profits.
