Quarterly Commentary as at March 31, 2019

Thus far in 2019, U.S. equities have pivoted off the Christmas Eve lows, staging a strong rebound, if only reclaiming a portion of the losses of 2018. The main support for the rebound has been more dovish central banks, though promising trade negotiations have also contributed.

Throughout the quarter, asset weighting in Financials and Materials sectors were the primary contributor to returns. As it relates to individual securities, the fund benefited from an overweight position of Baxter International in the Health Care sector as its shares advanced following strong financial results from their pharmaceutical and advanced surgery units. In addition, the fund benefited from its overweight position of Progressive within the Financials sector as the company which offers personal and commercial automobile insurance reported solid earnings driven by its underwriting margins.

Conversely, sector allocation and security selection in Health Care weakened relative performance. Specifically, the Fund's overweight position in CVS Health was a drag on performance as the company's stock price fell after they delivered a pessimistic 2019 outlook, citing rising costs and poor results from its 2015 takeover of pharmacy company Omnicare.

Looking forward, the profit outlook for the rest of 2019 may be challenged given the absence of another round of tax cuts and slower economic growth. However, moderate inflation and accommodative monetary policy should provide support for stocks. In addition, we continue to be mindful of the ongoing U.S.-China trade negotiations, the pace of global growth, and rising geopolitical concerns. Based on the balance of risks, we believe that for now, the global economy should continue to expand fast enough to support stocks in the short term, but there is less clarity to our intermediate-term view.
