Quarterly Commentary as at March 31, 2019

Thus far in 2019, U.S. equities have pivoted off the Christmas Eve lows, staging a strong rebound, if only reclaiming a portion of the losses of 2018. The main support for the rebound has been more dovish central banks, though promising trade negotiations have also contributed.

Throughout the first quarter of 2019, security selection within Consumer Staples boosted the relative performance of the Fund. In particular, our overweight position in Philip Morris was the largest driver on the back of the company reporting strong financial results during the quarter. In addition, the fund benefited from an overweight position in Cisco within the Information Technology sector. Shares in the IP networking company advanced as it reported strong earnings and displayed a willingness to return capital to investors through increased dividends and its share buyback program.

Conversely, sector allocation and security selection in Health Care weakened relative performance. Specifically, the Fund's overweight position in CVS Health was a drag on performance as the company's stock price fell after they delivered a pessimistic 2019 outlook, citing rising costs and poor results from its 2015 takeover of pharmacy company Omnicare.

Looking forward, the profit outlook for the rest of 2019 may be challenged given the absence of another round of tax cuts and slower economic growth. However, moderate inflation and accommodative monetary policy should provide support for stocks. In addition, we continue to be mindful of the ongoing U.S.-China trade negotiations, the pace of global growth, and rising geopolitical concerns. Based on the balance of risks, we believe that for now, the global economy should continue to expand fast enough to support stocks in the short term, but there is less clarity to our intermediate-term view.
