Quarterly Commentary as at March 31, 2017

The S&P/TSX Composite Index hit an all-time high in the most recent quarter, and the index's total return of 21% in 2016 made it among the best-performing global equity markets. Notwithstanding this strength, the index return in the latest three months lagged the S&P 500 Index.

The Fund had a positive start to the year by outperforming the S&P/TSX Composite during the first quarter. Underweight exposure to Energy and Health Care sectors, the two worst performing sectors during the quarter, benefitted the Fund.

Overweight exposure and security selection in the Information Technology sector boosted returns. The off-benchmark holding of Shopify, the online platform that helps bring small businesses to the web, was a strong contributor over the quarter.

The Fund was also overweight Consumer Discretionary, where the sector outperformed the broader market. Off-benchmark exposure to the newly public company, Canada Goose, also boosted returns during the quarter.

Conversely, within the Energy sector, overweight exposure to Crew Energy hindered returns. Energy dragged down market performance, due to weakness in oil prices in March, concern about OPEC compliance discipline, and a rising rig count in the U.S.

Leading economic indicators are at their best levels in several years, economic surprises have been predominantly positive and corporate earnings continue to recover from their prior stumbles. Taken together, global economic signals remain quite strong by post-crisis standards. As a result, risk assets such as equities and corporate credit have performed well.

For the S&P/TSX Composite Index, estimates for 2017 earnings are now about $914 and the early read on 2018 is near $1,040. These forecasts are a considerable uptick versus 2016 and reflect returns on equity for the index that are consistent with the longer-term average.
