Quarterly Commentary as at March 31, 2019

European stocks saw their best quarter in four years as they all but erased the losses suffered in the final quarter of 2018. The key drivers of this reversal were twofold; first, dovish rhetoric emanating from the U.S. Federal Reserve (Fed) demonstrated a change in tack for U.S. monetary policy, thereby reducing the fears of more interest rate rises occurring during 2019. The second was apparent progress in the trade talks between the U.S. and China, giving cause for optimism that the effects of the trade war may be receding.

Despite the market rallying to the geo-political news and monetary policy earlier in the quarter, concerns still remain over the continued weakness in global growth. Softer Chinese domestic demand has hampered markets; questions still remain about the effect a lack of further progress in U.S.-China trade talks or a more hawkish Fed may have on global markets.

Economic activity in Europe remains subdued. After troughing in January, the IHS Markit composite PMI rose again in February, although March saw a small decline. Manufacturing figures have been particularly poor as have export figures (industrial production is down 2.5% since its peak in December 2017). Despite this, unemployment continues to decline, with labour markets strong across Europe.

At a sector level, our position in Consumer Staples was the standout positive contributor, whereas the position in Communication Services was the smallest contributor.

The largest individual contributor was our position in London Stock Exchange Group. The second largest contributor was Heineken. The largest detractors were EssilorLuxottica and Bayer.

While we are, as always, cognisant of the wider macro environment, our focus remains on the discipline of long-term investing in companies with strong competitive positions, low capital intensity, sustainable and/or improving profitability.
