Quarterly Commentary as at March 31, 2019

The biggest contributor to relative returns this quarter was our holding Danaher. The U.S. manufacturer of medical equipment appreciated after a positive reaction to the $USD 21bn purchase of GE's bio pharma division, its largest acquisition to date. U.S. industrial equipment manufacturer Fortive, which was spun out of Danaher in 2016, also contributed to returns as the company completed a reorganisation of some underlying businesses which was received positively.

The biggest detractor from relative returns in Q1 was U.S. provider of healthcare programmes, UnitedHealth. In concert with a number of Health Care stocks UnitedHealth fell after mooted Democrat proposals to replace U.S. private healthcare plans with a universal 'Medicare for all' programme.

Having fallen dramatically in Q4 2018, global markets recovered well in Q1 of 2019. The macro-political environment appears to be contributing to the marked volatility that we are witnessing, not just in terms of equity prices, but also across fixed income and commodities. Amid the uncertainty any news – good or bad – is amplified and the resultant asset price moves are significant. The market recovery was largely the result of the U.S. Federal Reserve announcement that it would slow the pace of interest rate rises, with none now expected for 2019.

In local currency terms all countries and regions were positive, with the U.S. the strongest market, and all sectors were positive. Major currency returns were mixed versus the U.S. dollar; the pound sterling appreciated most as it became unlikely that a 'no-deal' Brexit would happen, and the euro and Japanese yen were the weakest.

As always the RBC Global Equity team remains committed to the discovery of companies that we deem to be future success stories. We are constantly searching for compelling long-term opportunities at the right valuations whilst avoiding those businesses that are overvalued or optically cheap but fundamentally flawed.
