Quarterly Commentary as at September 30, 2017

The S&P/TSX Composite Index languished after hitting an all-time high in February 2017. The index moved back into positive territory for the year, but remains below the aforementioned highs. The TSX had a strong Q3 and outperformed the S&P 500, but continues to lag YTD.

Numerous factors contributed to the Canadian market's underperformance, including continued weakness in the Energy sector, concerns about the composition of Canadian economic growth and rising interest rates. Market sentiment was also impacted by looming uncertainty regarding negotiations to rework NAFTA, and that questions about Canada's competitiveness remain amid a backdrop of higher taxes, currency headwinds and higher labour costs.

The Bank of Canada raised rates for the first time in seven years in July and again in September. The market was concerned that this marked the beginning of policy normalization with steady increases anticipated. Governor Poloz later assured that further moves would be data dependent and there's no predetermined path.

Security selection and asset weighting within in the equity portfolio aided returns. Overweight positioning and security selection boosted returns in Energy as the sector benefitted from the rise in oil prices during the quarter. Security selection boosted returns in Materials, overweight position Agrium helped as its merger with PotashCorp nears.

Stocks continue to be supported by a global synchronized expansion and renewed corporate-profit growth around the world. While stocks are not as cheap as they were when the cycle began, they remain somewhat attractive. Markets have benefited from rising earnings and price-to-earnings ratios through this bull market, but earnings rather than valuations may now be the force needed to propel the market higher.
