Quarterly Commentary as at September 30, 2017

The U.S. stock market made progress again this past quarter. Strong performances from the Information Technology, Energy and Telecommunication Services sectors powered the advance, while the Consumer Discretionary and Consumer Staples sectors were detractors.

The S&P 500 (CAD) is up since the November election, but corporate fundamentals rather than politics have been the driving force for the market. After three years of essentially flat earnings, the S&P 500 is expected to generate roughly 10% earnings growth in 2017. Our indicators suggest that the odds of a recession remain fairly low, but the risks of a correction have increased.

During the quarter, security selection in Industrials and Materials aided returns. Strong returns from overweight position, Boeing in the Industrials sector boosted relative returns as the company has been cutting its costs in an effort to improve profit and cash flow. In Materials, LyondellBasell announced expansion plans, which boosted returns for the Fund's overweight position.

Conversely, security selection in Health Care was a detractor. Drug distributors, including overweight position Cardinal Health have been a drag, in part to generic drug pricing pressure.

Stocks continue to be supported by a global synchronized expansion and renewed corporate-profit growth around the world. With many equity markets at or near all-time highs, investors are rightly concerned about the sustainability of the bull market in equities. While stocks are not as cheap as they were when the cycle began, they remain somewhat attractive. Markets have benefited from rising earnings and price-to-earnings ratios through this bull market, but earnings rather than valuations may now be the force needed to propel the market higher.
