Quarterly Commentary as at December 31, 2017

The U.S. stock market made significant progress again this past quarter. Strong performances from the Consumer Discretionary, Information Technology and Financials powered the advance, while the interest rate sensitive Utilities, Real Estate and Telecommunication Services sectors, along with the relatively defensive Health Care sector were detractors.

The S&P 500 (CAD) finished up for the year, driven by a synchronized global economic expansion, accommodative global monetary policy and hopes for U.S. tax reform. The S&P 500 is on track to generate over 10% earnings growth in 2017. In addition, recent economic data and the passage of tax reform suggests that earnings momentum should remain strong at least through the first half of 2018.

During the quarter, overweight positioning in Financials and Industrials helped returns, while security selection in Energy, Information Technology and Industrials also added to performance. In Energy, overweight positions in Valero Energy and Occidental Petroleum boosted performance as investors came back to the sector as the oil price moved higher. In Information Technology, overweight positions in semiconductor leaders, Intel and Texas Instruments boosted returns. In Industrials, an overweight position in plane-maker Boeing continued to benefit the portfolio as the company continued to generate financial results above expectations.

Conversely, our overweight allocation and security selection in Consumer Staples was a detractor. Overweight positions in retail drug store operator CVS and global tobacco heavyweight Phillip Morris hurt performance.

Stocks continue to be supported by a global synchronized expansion and renewed corporate-profit growth around the world. With many equity markets at or near all-time highs, investors are rightly concerned about the sustainability of the bull market in equities. Markets have benefited from rising earnings and price-to-earnings ratios through this bull market, but earnings rather than valuations may now be the force needed to propel the market higher.
