Quarterly Commentary as at December 31, 2017

The U.S. stock market finished a strong year, on the back of solid returns from cyclical sectors. The strong overall performance was driven by the continuation of the synchronized global economic expansion, still accommodative global central-bank policy and low market interest rates and inflation, which drove better-than-expected financial performance for most U.S. companies. Tax reform also helped to lift investor sentiment late in the year.

During the quarter, the Fund's relative performance was boosted by the Health Care and Utilities sectors, while Industrials was a drag.

Security selection and an underweight allocation to the Health Care sector aided returns. In particular, the exclusion of Celgene improved returns as the stock took a hit in October after the company reduced their outlook and reported disappointing sales of its psoriasis drug.

In the Utilities sector, the Fund's exclusion of PG&E, PPL Corp and The Southern Company all benefitted performance as the stocks declined.

Conversely in the Industrials sector, an overweight position in Johnson Controls weighed on performance. The stock declined as anticipated synergies from the company's acquisition of Tyco have not materialized to this point.

While our base case is for stocks to rise modestly over the next year, there are several scenarios that could lead to declines, including an escalation of tensions with North Korea, a policy mistake by the U.S. Federal Reserve (Fed) or protectionist trade moves by the Trump administration. Our indicators suggest that the odds of a recession remain fairly low, but with valuations at an eight-year high and the Fed intent on normalizing interest rates, the risks have increased and earnings growth remains key for return prospects.
