Quarterly Commentary as at June 30, 2017

Global government bond yields fell early in the quarter after investors grew skeptical that the Trump administration would be able to get Congress to enact his pro-growth policies. That reversed in June and global bond yields moved higher as central banks around the world began to communicate the possibility of tighter monetary policy. In North America, the U.S. Federal Reserve increased rates again, the fourth rate hike of this cycle. In Europe, the election of French President Emmanuel Macron boosted the price of bonds in countries other than Germany, as his win eased concern that Europe would support leaders promoting anti-trade and anti-immigration policies. At the same time, European economic momentum strengthened, prompting speculation that the European Central Bank would step away from bond buying earlier than expected. In response, yields on longer-maturity bonds edged higher, underperforming shorter-maturity securities.

The Fund's returns were boosted by allocations to the RBC Global High Yield Bond Fund, the RBC Global Corporate Bond Fund and the RBC High Yield Bond Fund. The BlueBay Emerging Markets Corporate Bond Fund had a negative impact on portfolio performance.

The portfolio manager expects bond yields to rise slowly in the coming quarters as the global economic expansion and fading threat of disinflation have led major central banks to consider tighter monetary policies. Investors expect the U.S. Federal Reserve to begin reducing the amount of bonds held on its balance sheet, an approach that the portfolio manager does not believe will disrupt fixed-income markets. Long-maturity yields are likely to remain range-bound in the near term and move higher as growth and improves and inflation firms.
