Quarterly Commentary as at December 31, 2017

The global economy is running at the fastest clip in seven years supported by an increasingly broad-based expansion, favourable financial conditions and optimism among businesses and consumers. As a result, we nudged our global growth forecasts higher for 2018 and expect firming inflation. Our forecasts for growth and inflation are slightly above consensus.

Government bonds posted modest returns in the fourth quarter of 2017 as inflation remained subdued and many major central banks continued their bond-buying activities. Yield curves in general continued to flatten, with yields on short-dated bonds rising more than their longer-maturity peers. U.S. Treasuries underperformed other developed markets, as yields rose in December after the U.S. Federal Reserve boosted the short-term interest rate for the third time during 2017 and tax reform was enacted.

All of the Fund's investments had a positive impact on returns. The holdings that contributed the most to portfolio performance were RBC Bond Fund, Phillips, Hager & North Total Return Bond Fund, Phillips, Hager & North Short Term Bond & Mortgage Fund and RBC Global Corporate Bond Fund.

The portfolio manager expects global bond yields to rise slowly in the coming quarters amid faster global economic growth and expectations that many major central banks will soon be raising rates in unison. In addition to rate hikes, central-bank reductions in asset purchases should eventually result in higher bond yields. By the second half of 2018 – and for the first time in a decade – net purchases by global central banks will not be adding liquidity to the global financial system.
