Quarterly Commentary as at September 30, 2017

During the third quarter of 2017, U.S. high yield bonds outperformed higher quality Canadian investment grade securities. With the Canadian economy growing more strongly than expected, the Bank of Canada raised interest rates for the first time since 2010, and caused Canadian fixed income securities to underperform corporate bonds in the U.S. Meanwhile, key supports for the high yield market remained in place. Credit conditions were benign, corporate health continued to improve slightly, the net supply of newly issued bonds remained manageable, the price of oil continued to recover and the corporate default rate fell. In a reversal from the second quarter, lower rated bonds outperformed the higher rated segments of the market. The Fund maintained its overall defensive positioning during the quarter by keeping the credit quality of the portfolio high, and maintaining a conservative cash position. The Fund benefitted from its exposure to high yield bonds in general, while its conservative cash position reduced volatility but also served as a drag on performance.

Demand for yield and a healthy economic backdrop should continue to support corporate bonds. Given that central banks are beginning to lean toward tighter monetary policies, we believe that high-yield corporate bonds remain attractive relative to other fixed-income assets. However, it is likely that future returns will be lower than those experienced in the recent past as valuations become less compelling and possible headwinds emerge. This extended credit cycle may continue for a while yet. We intend to closely monitor the credit quality of the Fund, and look to add attractively valued bonds as they become available.
