Quarterly Commentary as at March 31, 2017

Emerging markets (EM) bonds rebounded from a weak fourth quarter as investor optimism related to Trump's fiscal and protectionist policies began to wane. U.S. Treasuries traded in a relatively tight range, with the 10 year yield ending the quarter at 2.39%, 4 basis point lower than where it started the year. Narrowing spreads for EM bonds were the key contributor to the strong positive returns for the quarter. With Trump having a difficult time implementing his pre-election promises, investor concerns over his protectionist policies and the potential implications on EM countries diminished. This sentiment was reflected in robust demand for EM sovereign and corporate bonds.

Within the market, long-term EM bonds outperformed shorter-term issues. Our decision to increase the Fund's weight to longer-term bonds near the end of last quarter proved to be beneficial for returns. We also broadly saw lower quality sovereign issuers outperform the higher quality countries. The Fund tends to have a bias towards higher quality names, so the low quality outperformance was a key source of underperformance relative to the benchmark.

As we look ahead, the large supportive factors for EM remain intact. Chinese growth, stable commodity prices and accommodative monetary policy have created an environment that is favourable to EM generally and has resulted in riskier high yielding debt outperforming better quality investment grade. Fundamental strength may play a larger role in relative performance between EM countries in a weaker market environment, but for now investors appear keen to chase yield and not discriminate much between credit fundamentals. We continue to bias the Fund toward countries with positive economic and policy momentum and are stubbornly embracing the path to reform.
